Overview
Christopher C. DeMuth is an American lawyer and a distinguished fellow at the Hudson Institute, as well as director of the National Conservatism conference organized by the Edmund Burke Society. He was the president of the American Enterprise Institute, a conservative think tank, from 1986 to 2008. Wikipedia ›
DeMuth moderating a question-and-answer session with President George W. Bush in 2008
DeMuth is said to have read American Enterprise Institute publications as an undergraduate and used them as a lecturer at Harvard.[2] He was appointed president of AEI at a time of crisis for the institute, after the turbulent presidency of William J. Baroody Jr. AEI was a respected institution, but Baroody had been careful to keep AEI in the political mainstream.
During DeMuth's tenure, AEI turned further to the political right wing.[6] DeMuth returned the institute to its conservative and small-government principles, allowing it to compete with The Heritage Foundation and Cato Institute, and bringing in more money from conservative foundations.[5][7] At the beginning of his tenure, AEI was in severe financial distress.[6] DeMuth restored AEI's financial fortunes, eliminating $9 million in debt and generating an asset balance of over $75 million. He also more than tripled AEI's budget during his presidency.[2] Academic David M. Lampton writes that during DeMuth's tenure, AEI was responsive to the financial power of "America's hard right".[6]
DeMuth presided over the institute as a number of high-profile scholars joined AEI, including Charles Murray, Richard and Lynne Cheney, Michael Barone, James K. Glassman, Newt Gingrich, Karl Zinsmeister, and Ayaan Hirsi Ali. As many as twenty AEI scholars served in the George W. Bush administration. AEI scholars also influenced the administration.[8] Announcing his departure from AEI in 2007, DeMuth noted that the Iraq surge strategy was devised at AEI.[9] DeMuth oversaw the creation of an AEI magazine, the founding a joint center on regulation with the Brookings Institution, where he was a fellow, the expansion of AEI's publications, the founding of AEI's National Research Initiative to underwrite and promote research by university-based academics and independent scholars, a reorientation of AEI's foreign policy division to focus on the Middle East, and the merger of the National Legal Center for the Public Interest into AEI to form the AEI Legal Center for the Public Interest.[2]
DeMuth announced his retirement as president in October 2007,[9] and became a senior fellow at AEI at the beginning of 2009.[2] His announcement was met with praise and criticism. Conservative writers referred to him as "charming" and "brilliant" and wrote: "It is just remotely possible that there may be someone whose contributions to American intellectual life over the past two decades have equaled those of Christopher DeMuth."[12] Liberal critics have noted their disapproval of DeMuth.[13]
Since retiring as president of AEI, DeMuth has held the D.C. Searle Chair there, researching government regulation, culture, and U.S. politics. He has also been active in promoting the work of prominent 20th century U.S. political thinkers, calling them proponents of ideas "timely, topical, pertinent, and relevant to today."[14]
National Conservatism
In 2019, DeMuth joined American-Israeli scholar Yoram Hazony in organizing the first National Conservatism conference. He has been the main director for controversial conference group ever since.[15][16] He has written extensively on the need for a new American nationalism.[17]
Personal life
DeMuth is married to Susan DeMuth, a physician, and they have three children. He is a board member of State Farm.[18]

Cryptocurrency firm Tether invested $775 million in the video platform Rumble in December 2024. As part of the strategic deal, Tether acquired over 103 million shares of Rumble's Class A common stock at $7.50 per share.
Key details of the deal include:
Purpose of the investment: Of the $775 million, Rumble planned to use $250 million to fund growth initiatives.
Share buyback: The rest of the investment, $525 million, was used to complete a tender offer for 70 million shares of Rumble's Class A common stock, giving liquidity to existing shareholders.
Company governance: Rumble's CEO, Chris Pavlovski, remains the majority shareholder and maintains voting control. Tether holds a minority stake and has no right to designate members to Rumble's board of directors.
Broader relationship: In addition to the direct investment, Tether has said it plans to explore opportunities with Rumble related to cloud services, crypto payments, and advertising.
The news of the investment, which was completed in the first quarter of 2025, caused Rumble's stock price to surge significantly.

The Intelligence-Financial Nexus: Team8 and Eric Schmidt
The contemporary network reveals sophisticated intelligence-technology integration through Team8, founded by former commanders of Israel's elite Unit 8200 intelligence unit 8 9.
Key Network Components:
Eric Schmidt's Innovation Endeavors provided early funding to Team8 8
Former NSA Director Mike Rogers joined Team8's advisory board after leaving government service 8
Schmidt is also a major investor in Narya Capital, backing J.D. Vance's venture capital career 10 11
Team8 has received $85 million in funding from Microsoft, Cisco, Walmart, Airbus, and other major corporations 12
This creates a direct pipeline from Israeli military intelligence (Unit 8200) through Team8 to major U.S. technology corporations and venture capital networks.
Vance launched his own venture capital firm in 2019 under the name Narya Capital, which sought to invest in startups in overlooked cities and reportedly received backing from Thiel and other billionaire investors like venture capitalist Marc Andreessen and former Google CEO Eric Schmidt, Axios reported.

So... I know what you're thinking.
"Wait a minute! Are you really telling me all of this was COORDINATED in advance? The tech bubble? COVID? 2008? FTX? ALL of it?
That somehow, certain "picked winners"already knew what was going on ahead of time and they were able to time the bubble perfectly, just to emerge from the rubble around them ready to capitalize on being the "last man standing" after an historic market and sector crash, well-coordinated and horrific terror attacks against the United States and grotesque profiteering schemes to enrich themselves on all the death, destruction and destitution?"
CLIFFS: Yes. I'm telling you that.
Because that's what abso-fucking-lutely happened.
And we're going to spend the entirety of Part 2B, which won't be NEARLY as long as Part 2A here (I assure you), matching each of those timelines and money/business trails and pinpointing the key players involved, many of whom are still around and closely involved TODAY.

AI Overview
Michael Flynn and Charles Flynn are brothers who both served as high-ranking generals in the U.S. Army. Michael Flynn gained public prominence for his controversial political career, while Charles Flynn is known for his decades of military service.
Michael Flynn
Michael Flynn is a retired U.S. Army lieutenant general who served as National Security Advisor for the first 24 days of the Trump administration in 2017.
Military Career: During his 33 years of service, Flynn held various intelligence assignments and played a significant role in shaping U.S. counterterrorism strategy in Iraq and Afghanistan. He served as the Director of the Defense Intelligence Agency from 2012 to 2014, when he was reportedly forced into retirement after clashing with superiors.
Russian Contacts: Following his military career, Flynn received payments from Russian-linked entities and was an outspoken critic of the Obama administration.
Political Controversy: He served as a national security advisor for Trump's 2016 presidential campaign. He resigned as National Security Advisor in February 2017 after lying to Vice President Mike Pence and the FBI about his conversations with the Russian ambassador.
Post-Pardon Activities: After being pardoned by President Trump in 2020, Flynn has remained a public figure in far-right and Christian nationalist movements, advocating for conspiracy theories and an overturning of the 2020 election results.
Charles Flynn
Charles Flynn is a retired U.S. Army four-star general with a distinguished military career. He was the Commanding General of U.S. Army Pacific (USARPAC), which is headquartered in Hawaii, from June 2021 until his retirement in November 2024.
Charles Flynn
Charles Flynn is a retired U.S. Army four-star general with a distinguished military career. He was the Commanding General of U.S. Army Pacific (USARPAC), which is headquartered in Hawaii, from June 2021 until his retirement in November 2024.
Military Career: Over nearly 40 years of service, Charles Flynn held multiple command and leadership positions, including deploying for combat tours in Iraq and Afghanistan.
Controversy and the January 6th Attack: Charles Flynn's military career was scrutinized due to his brother Michael's political activities. This came to a head when it was revealed that Charles was present during a key Pentagon phone call concerning the deployment of the National Guard during the January 6th Capitol riot.
The U.S. Army initially falsely denied his involvement, stating he was not in the room.
Charles Flynn later confirmed his presence but denied that his brother's views or activities influenced his actions or decisions on January 6th.
Some military officials expressed concern that Charles Flynn's presence on the call could increase scrutiny on the Pentagon, given his brother's inflammatory remarks just one day earlier.
Separation of Duty: Charles Flynn has publicly and through supporters distanced himself from his brother's political views. A Hawaii representative, Ed Case, stated that Charles Flynn has proven fully capable of separating duty and family.

Not to be confused with Steve Case

Stephen McConnell Case (born August 21, 1958) is an American businessman, investor, and philanthropist best known as the former chief executive officer and chairman of America Online (AOL). Case joined AOL's predecessor company, Quantum Computer Services, as a marketing vice-president in 1985, became CEO of the company (renamed AOL) in 1991, and, at the height of the dot-com bubble in 2000, orchestrated with Gerald M. Levin the merger that created AOL Time Warner, described as "the biggest train wreck in the history of corporate America."[1][2][3]

Since resigning as chairman of the company in 2003, he has launched a venture-capital firm, Revolution LLC, based in Washington, D.C., and authored The Third Wave: An Entrepreneur's Vision of the Future, which in 2016 became a New York Times bestselling book.[4] In 2022 he published his second book, The Rise of the Rest: How Entrepreneurs in Surprising Places Are Building the New American Dream.

After a decade of quick growth, AOL merged with media giant Time Warner in 2001, creating one of the world's largest media, entertainment and communications companies.[12] The $164 billion acquisition was completed in January 2001 but quickly ran into trouble as part of the dot-com recession, compounded by accounting scandals. Case announced his resignation as chairman in January 2003, although he remained on the company's board of directors for almost three more years.[13]

The failure of the AOL-Time Warner merger is the subject of a book by Nina Munk entitled Fools Rush In: Steve Case, Jerry Levin, and the Unmaking of AOL Time Warner (2005). A photo of Case and Time Warner's Jerry Levin embracing at the announcement of the merger appears on the cover.

In 2005, Case wrote in The Washington Post that "It's now my view that it would be best to 'undo' the merger by splitting Time Warner into several independent companies and allowing AOL to set off on its own path."[14]

Laura Bush announces a $60 million partnership between the U.S. Government and the Case Foundation at the Clinton Global Initiative conference in New York on September 20, 2006. With her, from left, are: Raymond Chambers, Chairman, MCJ and Amelior Foundations; former President Bill Clinton; and Jean Case and Steve Case.

Case resigned from the Time-Warner board of directors in October 2005, to spend more time working on Revolution LLC, a D.C.-based investment firm he founded in April 2005.

Other exits include the purchase of Revolution Money by American Express in 2008 for $300 million, and on May 19, 2014, MorningStar announced plans to acquire HelloWallet for an undisclosed amount.[39] Additionally, Case recognized another successful exit when Towers Watson acquired early exchange pioneer Extend Health for $435 million in May 2012.

In 2011, Case, along with Ted Leonsis, launched the $450 million Revolution Growth fund.[37] The fund's investments to date include Bigcommerce, Custom Ink, Echo360, FeeBid, Handy, Lolly Wolly Doodle, Optoro, Orchard, Resonate, Revolution Foods, Sweetgreen, Sparefoot, Bedrock Manufacturing, LDiscovery, Interactions, Cava, DraftKings, Sportradar, Tala, Tempus, TalkSpace and Uptake. In 2013, he launched the Revolution Ventures fund with Tige Savage and David Golden. Revolution Ventures has invested in BenchPrep, Booker, Busbud, Framebridge, Homesnap, Inokit, OrderUp, RunKeeper, MemberSuite, PolicyGenius, Pare, Bloomscape and Bright Cellars. In 2017, Case launched the Rise of the Rest Seed Fund, investing in companies outside of San Francisco, New York and Boston. The fund has invested in companies across 78 cities and 30 states.[38] Case has also invested directly in other companies, such as Kenyan solar provider M-Kopa.[39]

Case controls tens of thousands of acres of land in Hawaii, including a controlling interest in Maui Land & Pineapple Company,[39] and Grove Farm, obtained in a highly controversial transaction which led to years of litigation by the farm's previous owners.[40]

Family

His father, Daniel H. Case, is the founding partner of the Hawaiian law firm of Case Lombardi & Pettit.[41] His mother Carol was an elementary school teacher. His parents had three other children.[42] His brother Dan died from brain cancer at the age of 44 in June 2002.[43]

Case is a cousin of Ed Case, who served as a Hawaii congressman[44] from 2002 to 2007 and since 2019.[45]

In 1985, Case married Joanne Barker whom he had met while attending Williams College. The couple had three children and divorced in 1996.[46][47][48] Two years later, in 1998, he married former AOL executive Jean Villanueva in a ceremony officiated by Billy Graham.[49]

Case donated $10 million to Punahou School to build a junior high school named after his parents.[50] He is a Christian.

Farewell from a 'non-Kahanist'

Yoram Hazony

IN the spring of 1984, on a night when most of the university's undergraduates were out drinking and dancing at the annual "P-Party," Rabbi Kahane came to speak at Princeton.

Two hundred and fifty students, mostly non-observant Jews, gave up the free beer to go hear what the infamous fanatic, condemned by the Hillel but brought to campus by the debate team, had to say for himself. It was a speech many of us never forgot.

"When your parents can't give you a single reason not to marry a wonderful girl you're in love with, but they're outraged about the marriage because she isn't Jewish, that's just racism," he told us.

"When you have a bar mitzva where you don't understand a word you read, and the rabbi and the congregation think its okay because it's a chance to spend $10,000 on shrimp and salmon mousse, that's just idiocy," he told us.

"When millions of Jews sit in America so they can make money, and take part in Israel's fight to survive by turning on the TV and maybe writing a check for a few bucks, that's just cowardice," he told us.

And he told us something else. He told us that we were ignorant about Judaism, that we knew more about Christianity and Marxism than we knew about being Jews. When one of the students began fumbling for examples to show that Jewish law was oppressive and outdated, Kahane paused to stare down at him from the podium, disgust and pity washing across his face.

"What do you know?" he said slowly. "What do you know? I'm an Orthodox rabbi. I studied for years and years and years. You don't know a thing about what Judaism is. Why don't you go learn something, so you don't have to be an ignoramus in front of all these people?"

We were mesmerized. Most of my friends, who had never had a conversation with an observant Jew, were astounded that an Orthodox rabbi could be an intelligent person, that he could actually defend his views against a crowd of Princeton students, when we had all thought that Judaism had to be something primitive and foolish. We listened in astonishment, and finally in shame, when we began to realize that he was right. We did know nothing.

> We never adopted his political views. But Kahane was the only Jewish leader who seemed to understand how much we wanted a good reason to stay Jewish MEIR KAHANE spent 20 years touring American college campuses with his message: learn about Judaism, move to Israel, stand up and fight for what you believe in.

In my years as a student, never once did I hear this message come out of the mouth of another speaker. Not from the campus rabbi, who feared that speaking out would make students feel uneasy. Not from the Jewish Agency emissary, who thought that if we had "any questions" we would come to him. Not from visiting Israeli politicians, who usually gave neither aliya nor Judaism even an honorable mention. Rabbi Kahane was the only Jewish leader who ever cared enough about our lives to actually come around and tell us what he thought we could do. He was the only one who seemed to understand how much we wanted a good reason to stay Jewish – though all we got was felafel study breaks at the Hillel.

And his message worked. At least five students who were in the hall that night gradually became observant. Today they live in Israel, and there are others on the way. One, who took up Rabbi Kahane's challenge to spend years studying in yeshiva, credits Kahane's talk with having been the single event that goaded him onto the road that eventually brought him, his wife and son to make aliya. And many others were certainly affected in less dramatic, but essential ways: to choose against intermarriage, to become more active for Israel, to fight for Soviet and Ethiopian Jews.

Nor was the phenomenon confined to one particular speech. Over the years, it has become apparent to me that there is virtually no young Jewish-American activist who has not read his books, heard his speeches, cheered and laughed at his radio debates in dorm rooms where someone had one on tape. One friend, the product of a modern-Orthodox day school education, recently told me that in his high school, "you just learned a lot of Humash and Gemara, but if you wanted to feel like being a Jew was about doing something, you had to read Kahane's books."

Before encountering Kahane, the average Jewish student had secretly concluded that "organized religion" (a euphemism for Judaism) was nothing more than a hoax, a pact among sentimentalists to pretend that the local rabbi was wise, or that the Sabbath was important, when clearly they were not.

We found ourselves drawn to Kahane in spite of ourselves because, unlike any other Jewish "leader" we had ever met, he was willing to say what needed to be said: that an ignoramus was an ignoramus, that a phoney was a phoney, that there really were things in this world worth fighting for. By coming out and giving Jewish voice to the painful truths about our Jewishness, truths we had previously heard only from those openly opposed to Judaism, he returned to us the belief that Judaism could have truth on its side, that it could be something we didn't have to be embarrassed about, that we should be proud to wear a kipa and make our stand on the world stage as Jews.

The numbers of students whom Kahane in this way inspired, cajoled and shamed into being better Jews and Zionists was certainly in the many tens of thousands.

NEITHER I nor any of my friends from college ever adopted Kahane's political views. We were never able to reconcile the Judaism we learned with his predilection for violent solutions to problems, nor with his abusive manner of presenting his case for these solutions.

But adopting someone's political views is not the only way of expressing gratitude to someone who changed our lives, thrilled and entertained us, helped us grow up into strong, Jewish men and women. Many of us found other ways of doing what he asked.

For us, it has come time to say a most painful, heartfelt farewell.

The Mithril Capital diaspora has blown all the way over to Ohio. Mithril alums James J.D. Vance and Colin Greenspon have co-founded a new venture firm called Narya Capital and have already raised $93 million toward a target of $125 million.

A regulatory filing shows 38 investors backing the fund. Backers reportedly include VC and tech heavyweights Peter Thiel (Founders Fund/Mithril), Marc Andreessen (Andreessen Horowitz), Eric Schmidt (Google/Alphabet) and Scott Dorsey (High Alpha).

Greenspon and Vance are joined by Partner Falon Donohue, who was the first CEO of VentureOhio, which aims to increase access to capital for Ohio entrepreneurs, and who also founded Sadie Ventures, a seed-stage venture firm based in Columbus, Ohio.

Greenspon and Vance are among eight of 11 team members who left growth-stage investor Mithril in the past four years. (Read Where are they now: Mithril Capital.) Both left to join Steve Case's Rise of the Rest Fund, which invests in promising startups in markets that rarely attract significant amounts of venture capital. They will both continue to serve as advisers to Rise of the Rest, Axios reported.

Like Rise of the Rest, Narya will support entrepreneurs in under-served areas such as Salt Lake City, Atlanta and Raleigh-Durham, Axios reported.

Case's Revolution investment firm announced in October that it had raised $150 million for its second Rise of the Rest Fund.

Vance is best known as the author of "Hillbilly Elegy: A Memoir of a Family and Culture in Crisis," which recounts the despair and lack of opportunity he encountered growing up in the small town of Middletown, Ohio.

President's Message
Many Jews are rightly concerned about the viability of the Jewish tradition in the face of challenges from modern science, philosophy, and political ideas. Orthodox enclaves have proved wonderfully resilient by pursuing a strategy that largely ignores these issues. But what can be said to young Jews who are unwilling or unable to ignore modern ideas? Jews who wish to pursue scientific and philosophical studies at the highest level—and want to know if Judaism can remain meaningful in light of them? And what of non-Jews who want to believe that the Jews still have something important to say to the world?
These questions have been asked before. But the answers proposed have too often involved giving up on the intellectual and spiritual assets of the Jewish people and exchanging them for what have frequently turned out to be passing fads in modern thought. There is still no institution anywhere devoted to developing and disseminating the Jewish story—including the ideas of the Hebrew Bible and Talmud, the impact of these ideas on the history of the world, and the relevance of Judaism and Israel in our time—in a way that effectively answers questions raised by modern science and scholarship, and that can be relevant to thoughtful women and men both in the academic setting and in broader public life.
In the 1890s, Theodor Herzl called upon Jews to "return to Judaism"—to take up a life of proudly Jewish character, in which Jewish contributions to humanity would be made not through assimilation into the ideas and ways of the nations, but by means of Jewish independence both in politics and in the realm of the spirit.
While Herzl's political vision was achieved with the founding of the State of Israel, we are still waiting for the establishment of Jewish independence and self-determination in the realm of ideas and of the spirit.

In the 1890s, Theodor Herzl called upon Jews to "return to Judaism"—to take up a life of proudly Jewish character, in which Jewish contributions to humanity would be made not through assimilation into the ideas and ways of the nations, but by means of Jewish independence both in politics and in the realm of the spirit.
While Herzl's political vision was achieved with the founding of the State of Israel, we are still waiting for the establishment of Jewish independence and self-determination in the realm of ideas and of the spirit.
The Herzl Institute is proposed in answer to this need, as urgent today as it was a century ago. The Herzl Institute is the first research institute and training center specifically directed toward the development of Jewish ideas in fields such as Jewish philosophy and theology, Jewish political theory, the history of Jewish ideas on the world stage, the history and philosophy of Zionism, and the relationship of all of these disciplines with the broader world of general philosophy and science. Together, we hope to be build up a hub for scholarship and educational programs aimed at advancing a uniquely Jewish approach to modern science and ideas, providing scholars and students, rabbis and lay leadership with the tools needed to propose Judaism as a real alternative to other systems of thought now competing in the marketplace of ideas.
We have entered a moment in history in which the status of Judaism is no longer a given. Like much else in the civilization of the West, the place of the Jews and of Judaism is now in play. Alongside forces that have grown more hostile, there are other countervailing forces. In many places, we can see a waning of influences that have long prevented a respectful treatment of Jewish texts and ideas, and with this a new openness and a willingness to learn. Today there are many Jews, Christians, and others as well, who are anxious to hear that Judaism has something important to say. But do we know what it is we want to say to them?
All this is new, and it requires us to reconsider much that we've taken for granted. There should be one place in the world where women and men can come to reconsider and to think. Together, we can provide this place at the Herzl Institute in Jerusalem.

@7SEES_, this’ll be a fun addition to the obsidian map on the Flynn/Zio/Vance ntwk.🤣

@7SEES_ @KanekoaTheGreat, if you have the balls to actually LOOK at mountains of evidence, this thread & the embedded threads PROVE Charlie Kirk’s “best friends” are working with FOREIGN INTERESTS to cover up Kirk’s murder.

You’re welcome.

(I don’t expect you to acknowledge seeing it.)

What evidence do you have that Charlie Kirk's closest friends are covering up his murder?

How does that compare to the evidence against Tyler Robinson?

Investigators have Robinson's confession describing his motive and actions. His rifle was found nearby with his DNA on it. His Show more

Yesterday was a turning point for Israel US relations.
Les than 24 hours and the internet already figured out who the most likely culprit was.
He was their friend. He basically dedicated his life to them. And they murdered him in front of his family.

BREAKING:
The RFK jr blackmail story is breaking from multiple angles right now
It's bad. Even worse than I say in this video.
Blackmail by... certain people... at the highest levels of American politics.
Right now in 2025.
Buckle up. It's about to get weird.

Your entire post is an appeal to emotion from behind a faceless account entirely devoid of any discussion of evidence.

But yes, keep seeking your truth. We'll be over here discussing evidence if you care to join.
